A Cyclone in Montgomery County, Md. SANDY SPRINGS, Sept. S, 1879.—As all meteorological facts are of interest now, not only to scientists but to others, I send you a brief account of a grand and awe inspiring phenom epon that was witnessed on Wednesday afternoon, September 3. At about half past five o'clock I noticed a sound that often accompanies a hailstorm, and upon going out of the house it proved much louder than I anticipated, resembling the roar of several railroad trains crossing a high bridge, cr, as some thought, the noise attending a great conflagration. We ran to the south side of the house, and witnessed a sight never to be forgotton. Dark, threatening clouds were moving towards the east, while over them were others, brightly illuminated, either stationary or moving to-wards the west. In the southeast, at a distance of one or two miles, was a moving column of what appeared to be smoke, whirling violently, of an asby gray, and at times yellowish color, the air over it being filed with leaves, limbs of trees, and other debris, which at first sight were thought to be birds flying confused-ly in advance of the storm. Immediately above it was the funnel shaped cloud that always attends such hurricanes, the little end of which came down nearly to the ascending columo. It moved rapidly towards the northeast, and, as far as we can trace it, in nearly a stright line. At times the base of the column seemed illuminated, as if from the interior, causing some to think, on first seeing it, that it arose from burning buildings. Several observers speak of hearing an explosion, as if from a cannon. From all we can learn, thus far, it started upon the lands of Washington Cashill, and, moving at the rate of about fifteen miles per hour, was dissipated in the woods at Mahlon Chapler's, the distance traveled being nearly six miles. Iss path varied from 40 to 100 yards in width. As a general thing the damage was elay to tim. ber, fences and orchards. One or two buildings were slightly injured, but none were directly in the path of the storm. Trees were upropted, and many of large size were left with their trunks standing, but with tops wrenched off and limbs twisted and scattered far over the GRAY HAIR OR WHISKESS changed to a its course added excitement and terror, and we could not but thick of the devastation caused by similar tornadoes in the West. Fortunately there was no damage to life or limb. About an hour later, observers on an elevation saw another cloud of similar character gathering over the adjacent county of Howard, which we have since tearned did considerable damages to feners, creps and trees, the force of the wind being sufficient to blow a teamster from his saddle. In an orchard through which it passed in this county it is interesting to observe the rotary motion of the sterm, the trees lying somewhat like the spokes of a wheel. The day had been close and sultry, barome ter low and thermoneter high, with occasional showers. About so hour before the courrence

the sun shone out oppressively warm, and a most beautiful rainbow was visible just in advance of the hurricane. H. C. HALLOWELL. A Case of Elerhantiasis -About seven years ago Mr. J. F. Amputation of both limbs having been decided upon as the only means of affording him relief. that operation was performed on Thursday last.
